

TeachAde joins with Disney to promote the Disney Planet Challenge competition

TeachAde educator resource site to feature Disney's environmental education challenge empowering grade school children to make a difference in their communities

Nov. 04, 2010 – MIAMI, Fla. – TeachAde.com, an award-winning online community and resource center for educators, is excited to announce their partnership with the Walt Disney Company in support of Disney's Planet Challenge™. A natural addition to the free online educational resources offered by TeachAde, Disney's Planet Challenge (DPC) is a free, project-based, environmental competition for elementary and middle school students all across the United States.

The DPC program inspires students to be good stewards of the environment and empowers them to make a difference in their school, at home and in their local communities.

"We are thrilled to have this opportunity to partner with Disney and their quality award-winning team," said Michael Pearce, CEO of TeachAde.com. "Our mission and goals of supporting children and educators are in perfect alignment and we are very pleased to be able to support Disney's Planet Challenge competition for students."

The TeachAde.com web site will feature information, videos and useful links via its web site to support educators as they explore the program and participate with their students throughout the 2010-2011 school year. Over the course of DPC's long-term projects, students will identify an environmental issue in their local community and design a solution that they manage and document from start to finish.

Each participating class develops a portfolio for evaluation by a panel of experts on environmental-relevance, student learning, changes in practices and attitudes, community involvement, lasting benefits to students, school and/or community, and originality. Enrollment for the 2010-2011 Disney's Planet Challenge program is open until Friday, December 17, 2010.
